
FOREWORD

I am pleased to note that the Indian Journal of Projects, Infrastructure, and Energy Law (IJPIEL) is coming out with its 2nd Issue of its flagship Journal. The issue consists of numerous Articles written by students, academicians, and practitioners on a vast variety of legal topics with a sectoral focus on Projects, Infrastructure, and Energy Law.

The Post-COVID Era has brought new-fangled challenges to governments and international institutions, as Climate Change wreaks havoc on our daily lives and the balancing game between Sustainability and Development becomes tougher by the day. Thus, it is imperative to empirically analyse the developments in the Projects, Infrastructure, and Energy sectors and distinguish policy from profligacy.

I believe that this exercise of publishing the JPIEL Journal would assist students and practitioners by enhancing legal literacy and promoting responsible advocacy through cutting-edge academia. I am confident that this publication would go a long way in enlightening individuals in the development of Projects, Energy, and Infrastructure Law.

I extend my commendation to the Editorial Team led by the Managing Editor, Naman Anand, the Patron Firm (M/s Legacy Law Offices LLP), the Board of Advisors, and the Editorial Board for their laudable efforts and wish them success for this publication.
